

Down the Rabbit Hole

Alice was bored beside her sister when a white rabbit hurried past. It wore a waistcoat and carried a watch! Alice followed it down a hole and fell into a strange hall. A tiny door led to a lovely garden. But getting through it would not be easy.

A Sea of Tears

A strange drink made Alice small.
A little cake made her huge! She cried until her tears formed a pool.
Then a fan made her shrink again,
and she fell into her own tears.
Nearby, a mouse was swimming too. Wonderland was getting stranger every minute.

Everyone Wins the Race

Alice and the wet animals climbed onto dry land. A Dodo suggested a race to dry them off. They ran any way they liked, stopping whenever they pleased. Who had won? Everyone! Alice shared little sweets as prizes. For her own prize, the Dodo gave her a thimble she already owned.

Too Big for the House

The Rabbit mistook Alice for his servant and sent her to fetch his gloves. Inside his house, another drink made her grow until she filled the room. How could she get out? Small cakes appeared on the floor. One bite made her tiny again, and she hurried into the woods.

Advice from a Caterpillar

On a mushroom sat a blue Caterpillar. “Who are you?” he asked. Alice hardly knew after changing size so often. He told her that opposite sides of the mushroom would make her grow or shrink. With careful little bites, she learned to choose her size. At last, she had some control.

A Baby, a Pig, a Grin

Alice found a noisy kitchen full of pepper. The Duchess handed her a baby, but outside it turned into a pig and trotted away! Then a smiling cat appeared in a tree. It pointed her toward the March Hare. Slowly, the cat vanished—until only its grin was left.

Tea That Never Ends

The Hatter, March Hare and sleepy Dormouse sat at a crowded tea table. Their clock seemed stuck at teatime. They asked riddles, argued and kept changing seats. Alice finally had enough. She left, found a door in a tree, and returned to the hall. This time, she reached the garden.

The Queen's Strange Game

Gardeners shaped like playing cards were painting white roses red. Then the Queen of Hearts arrived, shouting angry orders. She invited Alice to play croquet—but the balls were hedgehogs, and the mallets were flamingos! Nothing would stay still. Alice was beginning to see how foolish the Queen could be.

The Mock Turtle's Story

A creature called the Gryphon led Alice to the sad Mock Turtle. He told her about his school beneath the sea, where every lesson had a very odd name. Alice listened and asked questions. Nothing in Wonderland worked quite like home—not even a school day.

A Very Silly Dance

The Mock Turtle and Gryphon showed Alice a dance called the Lobster Quadrille. They sang, turned and skipped as they described lobsters dancing in the sea. Alice tried to tell them about her own adventures. Then a shout interrupted everything: the trial was beginning! The Gryphon hurried her away.

Who Took the Tarts?

In the courtroom, the Knave of Hearts was accused of stealing the Queen's tarts. The Hatter and other witnesses gave answers that made little sense. Meanwhile, Alice began to grow again. The court seemed less frightening as she grew taller. Then the White Rabbit called her as the next witness.

Home from Wonderland

Alice refused to accept the court's silly rules. "You're nothing but a pack of cards!" she cried. The cards flew up—and suddenly she woke beside her sister. It had all been a dream. Alice ran home for tea, while her sister smiled and imagined those wonderful adventures for herself.

